ULB

The Erasmus Mundus Joint Doctorate Programme on “Globalisation, the EU, and Multilateralism” (EMJD-GEM) is a five year programme set up with the support of the European Commission aimed at fostering first-rate doctoral research within Europe on the common challenges facing the current global system.

The GEM PhD School was launched by a consortium of institutions which have taken the lead in the fields of International Relations, Comparative Politics, European Integration Studies, Comparative Regional Cooperation Studies (ex. Mercosur, Asean, NAFTA, etc...) and Inter-regional Research (ex. ASEM, Rio process, EU-AU, ...etc). Its' core objective is to offer a select group of top doctoral students from across the globe - both within and beyond the European Union - the means to accomplish their doctoral research and training. With this in mind,

The GEM PhD School offers an innovative set of integrated learning tools - shared training programs, supported international mobility, international seminars and joint workshops; and provides financial assistance, as well as a stable legal and administrative framework wherein to accomplish joint international research initiatives, involving at least two partner institutions.

The GEM PhD School's programme will thus pioneer an integrated approach to doctoral teaching which will be reflected in the joint tutorship and double doctorates associated with those theses written within the programme's context. All its activities are thus geared towards:

- i. Providing a set of top quality and multidisciplinary doctoral courses allowing for truly pluralistic and comparative approaches to “Globalisation, the EU and Multilateralism”
- ii. Fuelling existing European Integration Research, and strengthening the specific achievements accomplished within an ever stronger European Research Area
- iii. Guarantee continued excellence in education in a field of strategic importance for Europe
- iv. Enhancing the profile and visibility of the European Union in the fields of International Relations, other Social Sciences, and Humanities; whilst highlighting the findings born from the vast and unique efforts deployed by European HEI's in the field of EU studies.

The GEM PhD School: A Consortium of Leading Institutions

The GEM PhD School will offer a truly integrated doctoral programme of the highest academic quality, founded upon a strong research backbone and well-established international outreach programmes.

Consortium Composition

European Partners				Third-Country Partners
Name		Faculty		Name		Faculty
Université Libre de Bruxelles	Brussels, Belgium		Institut d'Etudes Européennes	Université de Genève	Geneva, Switzerland		Institut Européen
University of Warwick	Warwick, UK		Department of Politics & International Studies	Waseda University	Tokyo, Japan		Graduate School of Asia-Pacific Studies
Liberta Università degli Studi Sociali	Rome, Italy		Facoltà di Scienze Politiche	Fudan University	Shanghai, China		Centre for European Studies

All Doctoral Candidates will be employed by one of the European Partners

Besides these partner institutions - which will welcome the affiliated doctoral students and will bestow the earned doctoral degrees - the GEM PhD School can also count on the participation and support from a series of highly valuable associated institutions, amongst which:

Associated Institutions

Name		Faculty
Boston University	Boston, USA		Department of Political Science and International Relations
ITAM	Mexico City, Mexico		Departamento Académico de Ciencia Política
UNU-CRIS	Bruges, Belgium		Comparative Regional Integration Studies

All of these institutions have extensive networks within relevant research and doctoral training communities. All are recognized leaders – both nationally and internationally – within their fields. The GEM PhD School thus combines the necessary expertise to ensure: (i) the originality of its research; (ii) the scientific quality of the programme's activities; and (iii) the international scope of its impact.

The GEM PhD School: An Extensive Mobility Programme

Besides their enrolment at the institution heading the research programme associated with the student's research project, each enrolled doctoral student will be awarded a minimum of 6 months, and a maximum of one year, in visiting research fellowships at partner institutions.

These mobility efforts must be motivated and justified by an underlying joint research project, and must be reflected in the student's tutorship choices. Accordingly, all aspects of the program – its teaching, management, and mobility flows - reflect the foundational research jointly accomplished within the network. Accordingly, they will be decided upon from the onset and are to be outlined in the students' applications.

The GEM PhD School: An Integrated Teaching Programme

The full program contains the following educational modules, which the students can use to compile the necessary 180 Ects for graduation:

1. The methodological courses (max 12 Ects)
2. A profiling block of 1st year elective topic-specific courses & seminars (max. 12 Ects)
3. Common Group workshops within each Jointly Executed Research Project (6 Ects)
4. A set of 2nd and 3rd year specializing courses, seminars, research or teaching activities (max. 15 Ects),
5. Annual GARNET PhD seminars on "Global Governance, Regionalism, and the EU" (4-12 Ects) ;
6. The obligatory Doctoral Dissertation (120 Ects).

Integrated structure of the Doctoral programme (Total 180 Ects)

Methodological Courses	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • 1st year obligatory set of introductory courses (15 Ects)

Doctoral Dissertation	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • worth 120 Ects • 3-4 years till completion • Joint tutorship from 2 Institutions

In order to Graduate, a Students must collect a total of 180 Ects

The GEM PhD School: A Three-Pronged Research Agenda

Three specific Jointly Executed Research Projects (JERPs) - initiatives identified within the broader context of the GEM PhD School's research agenda - will offer the program its underlying backbone, and ensure that the programme combines both inter-disciplinary dialogue with more focussed analysis of a given dimension of the broad and complex phenomena at play within "Globalisation, the EU and Multilateralism".

These three component Joint Research Projects (JERPs) are:

GEM PhD SCHOOL
Joint Research
Project MORGANITE
Multilateral Organizations,
Regionalism and Global Governance:
Institutions and the EU

MORGANITE – headed by the IEE-ULB

An Institution-centred research initiative focussed on assessing the efficiency, legitimacy, and tensions inherently associated with regional, interregional and global institutionalized multilateral cooperation efforts.

GEM PhD SCHOOL
Joint Research
Project CITRINE
Confrontations and Cooperation shaping International and Transnational Regulatory Interest and the EU

CITRINE – headed by the University of Warwick

A concerted research initiative focused on analysing the implications of regulatory efforts associated with different articulations of multilateral order, as they apply within and between models of national capitalisms, supranational governance dilemmas and global security concerns.

GEM PhD SCHOOL
Joint Research
Project AMETRINE
Analysis of Multilateral, European, and other Regional Initiatives
as Normative Endeavors

AMETRINE – headed by LUISS

A coordinated research initiative focused on the normative components of European and international politics. It aims at comparatively examining European and non-European perspectives on issues of justice related to globalization and global politics.

This three-pronged structure is the product of the available expertise within the consortium. Each doctoral candidate will be associated with one of the abovementioned research tracks and will spend at least their first year at the institution heading the chosen Jointly Executed Research Project.

The CITRINE Research Project: The Specific Research Agenda

The CITRINE Joint Research Project will be coordinated and managed by the Department of Politics and International Studies (PaIS) at the University of Warwick. The Department boasts a thirty-strong cohort of academic staff, each of whom should be considered available to undertake supervisory duties for GEM School Fellows. The research specialisms of PaIS staff members cohere around the three groupings which provide the Department with its collective research culture and its specific profile of research outputs. One such grouping is in International Political Economy (IPE); another is in International Politics and Security Studies (IPSS); and a third is in Public Policy and Comparative Political Systems (PPCPS). PaIS is also the home to three specialist research centres: the Centre for the Study of Globalisation and Regionalisation (CSGR); the Centre for Studies in Democratisation (CSD); and the Centre for Ethics, Law and Public Affairs (CELPA). We welcome applicants to the CITRINE Joint Research Project who wish to undertake doctoral studies on topics related to any of these areas in which the Department has expertise. Given that we are a Department of Politics and International Studies you will fit best with us if your background is in those disciplines, but we are definitely open to the idea of supervising genuinely interdisciplinary PhDs on issues that are of interest to political scientists and/or international relations scholars.

Regulatory interests in the European Union and beyond are constantly being redefined under the twin pressures of globalisation and multilateralism. (1) The political economy of contemporary world order plays out against the backdrop of both a major financial crisis and the ever-present contestations that surround international trade politics. These are issues that have been studied in great detail and to widespread acclaim by members of our IPE Research Group. (2) The national and international security context of contemporary world order is situated against the backdrop of a permanently changing set of assumptions as new threats come to the fore and overlay historically-rooted social and political tensions. This is an area in which the reputation of the Department is growing rapidly thanks to the work of members of the relatively new IPSS Research Group. (3) Public policy decisions are likely in the near future to become increasingly prone to challenge at a variety of spatial scales, as public spending cuts take hold across Europe and beyond. Here the members of the PPCPS Research Group continue to be at the forefront of scholarly debates through their high profile work. Every member of the Department, at one level or another, focuses their research on the significance of regulatory interests, whether that is in terms of theorising shifting forms of legitimacy within everyday politics or through assessing the relative efficacy of policy-making conducted domestically, regionally and/or globally.

The CITRINE Research Project: The Main Research Questions

More than ever perhaps, the EU's relationship with its inside and outside is open to question. Within this debate sit quite different narratives of: (i) the regulatory role that different legal jurisdictions should have over economic, security and public policy issues; (ii) how these different legal jurisdictions should constitute themselves as actors within the increasingly global domains of production, finance, trade, the environment, national security, governance, etc.; and (iii) what sorts of values, preferences and norms should be represented – and by whom – in each of these fields of public policy and many more besides. At every turn, these narratives spark alternative technical and normative arguments, with each being enveloped by potential sources of political controversy and struggle. The quality and intensity of these debates vary within and between European states, as well as between European states and a range of differently situated social forces located in the rest of the world. In some cases the use of formal political authority is seen as an interventionist threat to neoliberal growth strategies. In others this view is inverted and the use of formal political authority has merely cemented neo-liberalism and should thus be seen as a threat to social progress, cohesion and developmental growth strategies designed to exit recession. These are also contests about legitimacy and the extent to which the economic, social and security governance beyond neo-liberalism can continue to rest upon currently existing political foundations.

The CITRINE Joint Research Project will study the interplay of any combination of forces that come together in struggles over the scope and character of contemporary regulatory interests.

The CITRINE Research Project: Sought after Doctoral Profiles

CITRINE's work will grow out of the following research themes. One or more of these themes will typically be embodied in all of the specific research initiatives to be sponsored at each call for doctoral applications.

Research Theme 1 – The intellectual underpinnings of divergent preferences on, as well as divergent expressions of, the desired regulatory structure of an increasingly global and multilateral world.

Research Theme 2 – The way in which global regulatory interests arise from their interaction with the production of ideas and the reproduction of institutions at all levels up to the global one.

Research Theme 3 – The future of local/national/regional economies and of distinct local/national/regional capitalisms within broader global reform of production, finance and trade.

Research Theme 4 – The future of local/national/regional security and of distinct security governance structures as part of the articulation of broader global threat concerns.

Research Theme 5 – The impact of changing multilateral regulatory norms on the everyday lives of citizens within the contested political structures of globalisation.

The CITRINE Research Project: Erasmus Mundus Fellowships: an Overview

Each year the Commission sponsors about 10 3-Year long Erasmus Mundus Fellowships. These fellowships are subdivided into two groups: category “A” fellows and Category “B” ones.

- A. Category A fellowships: Are to be awarded to doctoral candidates from all countries other than the 27 EU member states (or associated ones). However, to remain in category A doctoral candidates must not have been a resident, nor have carried out his/her main activity (studies, work, etc.), within the EU for more than 12 months over the last five years in one of these countries. Finally, as an exception to the previously cited rule, those non-EU nationals having spend more than 12 months in Europe within the context of an Erasmus Mundus Master’s program (EMMC) will nevertheless remain in category A.
- B. Category B fellowships: To be awarded to any doctorate candidate who does not fulfill the Category “A” criteria as defined above.

Category “A” and “B” fellowships are identical except that the first are eligible to receive a total of €7500 for travel and the latter €3000. Beside their lump travel allowance, each fellowship is made up of two more components: operational funds and salary/stipend. Operational funding aim to cover a doctoral student's tuition fees and operational costs; whereas the salary/stipend funds are provided so as to assure all EM fellows enjoy an equitable and comfortable monthly allowance.

		Category A scholarships (Maximum over 36 months)	Category B Scholarships (Maximum over 36 months)
I	Fixed contribution to travel, installation and any other type of costs.	€7500	€3000
II	Operational funds (incl. participation costs, insurance coverage, etc.)	€10800	€10800
III	Salary	€108000	€108000

The Commission remains the ultimate arbiter regarding the attribution of the available fellowship funds. It fixes the exact number of scholarships in light of the submitted “academic selection” submitted by the consortium’s Board of Directors. Upon reception of said qualified list of selected applicants, the Commission proceeds with its own internal verification (at this stage, the process is purely formal and administrative in its appreciation of the submitted fellowship candidates; substantial vetting of the applicants is entirely left to the Board of Director’s initial “academic selection”). Upon completion of said final checks the commission confirms number and the list of awarded scholarships and invites the consortium to inform the happy candidates.

For more detailed information regarding the fellowships please refer to either the program’s guidebook or the complementary information available on the program’s website (www.erasmusmundus-gem.eu)

The Application Deadline is January 16th 2011

The application process has been streamlined and standardized so as to guarantee maximal efficiency and equality throughout the process. Applications are to be handed in both electronically AND as a paper-copy by the January 16th 2011 deadline at the latest.

As a first step, an applicant should complete his/her electronic registration. Once, the electronic registration completed, the applicant will get both an electronic copy of all of his/her completed registration forms; as well as, a request to send in an electronic version of all necessary annexes.

In a second phase, completing the application process implies printing out the electronic forms and adding them to the paper-based copies of all the necessary annexes. The full set of paper-based components of the application is to be bound as a single document and send in by registered mail to the GEM Central Executive Office in Brussels

- I°- Submitted online through the “GEM Website”;
- II°- Send by registered postal mail to the “GEM Central Executive Office”

Admissible Applications must include:

1. Both online forms (the Identification Form & the Scientific Form) duly filled in
2. An Academic CV
3. A Separate Personal Essay detailing the submitted doctoral Project
4. A short overview of you understanding of the state-of-the-art within the relevant literature (i.e. an initial bibliographical outline)
5. A Distinct Presentation of the Personal Motivations behind the Application
6. A Specific Essay Motivating the choice of “Jointly Executed Research Project (i.e. MORGANITE) and the preferred Mobility Strategy
7. Language skills certificate (if necessary – see above)
8. Academic transcripts & legalized copies of diploma's
9. Two academic recommendation letters

The online application forms are to be found on the program's website at www.erasmusmundus-gem.eu

Online registrations will start by the end of November

The CITRINE Research Project: The Application Calendar

ALL APPLICANTS – be they from category A or category B – are subject to the same application calendar (i.e. deadlines, procedures and obligations)

STAGE 1 : APPLICATION

- ✓ Call General Publication
October 30th 2010
- ✓ Activation of Online Registrations
November 30th 2010
- ✓ Application Deadline for all applicants
January 16th 2011
[Both Category A & B applicants are subject to the same deadlines]

STAGE 2 : ACADEMIC REVIEW

- ✓ Publications of Academic Selection
February 15th 2011
[At this stage, the results of the scientific evaluation are published]
- ✓ Confirmation of Continued Interest by Accepted Applicants
